Theme for 2018 AgriBiz Expo: 'The Future of Agriculture'

The sixth annual SC AgriBiz & Farm Expo opens on Jan. 17 in a remodeled Florence Civic Center, with new programming targeted to specific audiences. Admission is free.

The Expo will kick off with keynote speakers on each of the two days, then four different tracks are scheduled to educate farmers.

The Field Crops Track, targeting row crop farmers, will provide information about the 2018 ag outlook and marketing for the future. Young farmers who have embraced new technology will share their successes, challenges and struggles in how they overcame obstacles. Worker Protection Standards training, an EPA federally regulated required class for all farmers who handle chemicals, is a must-attend session.

The Fruit and Vegetable Track is a jam-packed two-day class session with outstanding opportunities for farmers to establish marketing outlets and learn more about unconventional farming methods. Soil health, organic certification, high tunnel and vertical aeroponics are but a sampling of the interesting topics.

Wednesday afternoon brings a new tract, "Empowering Women in Agriculture." Whether she is a farm wife, sole proprietor, new young farmer or an industry supporter, each woman will benefit from innovative ideas. Keynote speaker Kathy McCaskill will share her story and her love for agriculture that make Old McCaskill's Farm an agritourism success.

Alumnae of Annie's Project, an educational curriculum for women engaged in farming, will meet to re-connect and welcome new alumnae. Now with 125 graduates from SC in the past six years, Annie's Project has created a strong support system.

On Thursday, the Field Crop Track offers two informative sessions: "Soybeans that Yield Like Corn" and "Amazing Corn Yields." Farm Bill updates will also be explained.

Another tract is Certified Animal Manure Management. The classes cover beef grazing systems, water quality protection, measuring impact on groundwater, and managing plant nutrients in manure.

In addition, a Farmer Appreciation Breakfast will be held on opening day, the trade show is open both days at no charge, and the popular "Taste of SC" will be Wednesday evening. The Commissioner's Breakfast on Thursday is a fund-raiser for the Commissioner's School for Agriculture.

Roots on the Road

When is the last time you traced your roots? Not your family's roots; the roots of the food you eat. Those roots should run deep.

Do these words sound familiar? I hope so – they come directly from one of our Roots of Your Food television commercials that began airing last month. You might recall that I wrote about this Roots campaign in a previous Market Bulletin column about new SCDA marketing projects.

The Roots campaign celebrates South Carolina's rich agrarian heritage and a new generation of farmers. The commercials, social media, and web videos encourage all of us to trace the roots of the food we eat all the way back to the hardworking men and women who grow and produce it. When we trace those roots, we find farmers who are passionate about their work and their communities. We find history and we find innovation. We find South Carolinians who make it possible for us to eat local, delicious food.

In conversations about food and farming, there are those who use emotional appeals of one kind or another with the goal of having consumers question today's farming practices that feed this country at such a great value. Science and facts sometimes don't make it into the conversation. Well, the Roots campaign highlights our farmers' passion for the work they do. I'll put that passion up against an off-base emotional appeal to consumers any time!

Beware of Potential Hay Scams

Area farmers should be aware of potential scams from out-of-state buyers targeting hay and other commodities. Kentucky and Texas have had problems with hay scammers, and a few South Carolina farmers have had complaints about potential hay purchases.

Producers should take extra care to protect themselves from scam artists when buying or selling commodities such as hay or livestock, especially when contacted through email, social media, or text message.

Typically a potential buyer texts the seller requesting hay. After they agree on an amount and price, the buyer sends a check for more than that amount, saying the additional money is for shipping. The buyer asks that the difference be wired back to him, but then the buyer's check bounces.

Warning signs of a possible scam may include:

- The buyer refuses to speak by telephone;
- The buyer proposes to mail the seller a check in excess of the negotiated price;
- The buyer is vague about transportation arrangements.

States that have a Hay Hotline seem prone to these calls. Farmers should also check charitable requests to donate hay or supplies, making sure the organization is legitimate.

Anyone who suspects a scam should contact local law enforcement and file a complaint with the Federal Trade Commission at this address: https://www.ftccomplaintassistant.gov/?utm_source=takeaction. Scroll down to "Scams and Ripoffs" and follow the instructions.

The Roots campaign comes with me when I travel around the state visiting farmers, giving talks, and meeting locals who love Certified SC Grown products. I talk about the farmers in our state whose passion for their livelihood makes up for the long hours, uncertain weather, and fickle markets.

I talk about the 10 farmers who are featured in Roots: Josh Johnson of the Old Thyme Bean Co.; Brittney Miller of Manchester Farms; Danny McAlhaney of D and D Farms; Chris Sumpter of Four Lane Farms; Paul Grant of Freshly Grown Farms; Kent Whetsell of Lowcountry Creamery; Spencer McLeod of McLeod Farms in McBee; Shawn Ransford of Holy City Farms on Wadmalaw Island; Lori Anne Carr of Titan Farms; and Lydia Yon of Yon Family Farms.

Many of these are longtime farmers, while others are relatively new at what they do. All in all, they represent agriculture in South Carolina and remind us that we'll find a dedicated farmer at the root of every meal we eat.

To quote the commercial again:

Farmers from every corner of our state are carrying on the traditions of bringing locally grown food to your table. So, choose food that's rooted right here. Choose Certified SC Grown...It's a Matter of Taste.

Visit certifiedscgrown.com/farmers to see videos and learn more about Roots and Certified SC Grown.

Winter Roadside Market Provides Quality Produce

Anyone traveling Hwy 8 to Pelzer from Greenville has passed Eddie's produce stand. This roadside market is part of the SC Certified Grown program.

Eddie's market was made possible through the S.C. Department of Agriculture roadside market program. The vegetable cold storage was through the S.C. Department of Agriculture Cool Bot program. The hoop house was a cost share program with Natural Resources Conservation Service that allows season extension for vegetable production.

Eddie Keller proudly shows some of the local kale and collards being produced for his S.C. Certified Roadside Market and cold storage unit. He will pick them when you drive up. Food cannot get any fresher than that unless you eat it on the stalk!

The combination of the three programs allows this producer to provide fresh healthy vegetables earlier in the spring and longer in the fall. He has an attractive structure to market produce and a cold storage area to insure the best quality post harvest.

Sam Howard Jr. and Eddie Keller work as a team to bring farm fresh produce to the residents of Greenville County and surrounding areas. They are among the many producers around the state who work hard to bring farm fresh produce to consumers.

Lowcountry Master Gardeners Offer Bare Root Trees, Shrubs

The "Buy Trees from MGs" fundraiser supports the work of the Clemson Extension Tri County Master Gardener Association. The gardeners sell bare root plants, which are young trees and shrubs that are field dug while dormant. They are packaged to prevent drying.

The deadline to order is Dec. 15. Pick-up for trees and garden gifts is Thursday, Jan. 11 from 1-5:30 p.m. or Friday, Jan. 12 from 9 a.m.-noon at either The Clemson University Coastal Research & Education Center, 2865

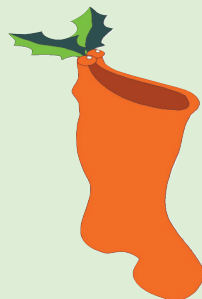

Savannah Hwy., Charleston or The Summerville Master Gardener Office, 210 Summers Corner, Summerville. Plants cannot be shipped.

Back by popular demand is the Worm Factory composting kit. To purchase only a worm bin, contact Consumer Horticulture Area Agent Amy Dabbs at 843-737-3942 or adabbs@clemson.edu.

To view the plants offered for sale, visit <http://bit.ly/BuyTreesfromMGs>.
